

Capt. Barrett reports that the fleet as a whole has done finely, far ahead of last season, and that many good stocks and shares have already been made. Several of the boats can at present show shares of over $300.

There has been a big lot of fish landed at New York and considering the amount brought in, the dealers used them finely on prices, etc.

When the seining fleet were harbored at Causo, N.S., recently, sch. Grayling had 400 barrels of salt mackerel, sch. Ralph L. Hall 350 barrels, sch. Annie M. Parker 250 barrels, sch. Taliaman 300 barrels, sch. Danatless 177 barrels, sch. Navahoe 100 barrels, sch. Edna Wallace Hopper 120 barrels, sch. S. F. Maker, 120 barrels, sch. Kentucky 90 barrels, sch. Bessie M. Devine 150 barrels, sch. Electric Flash 200 barrels. Five or six of the fleet had no fish.

The fare of sch. Ellen T. Gleason sold to the Gloucester Mackerel Co. at $10.15 per barrel.

The sch. Marquerite, Capt. John Barrett, is probably high line of the southern mackerel netting fleet thus far, the crew having shared $350.

A Good Month's Work.

The new fishing schooner Sadie M. Nunan of Cape Porpoise, Me., built at East Boothbay by Hodgdon Brothers in the fall of last year and commanded by Capt. Frank A. Nunan, has been successful thus far, the past month, from May 2 to June 2, being unusually so, the crew having shared $165 each.

The great scarcity of lobster pounds which now exists has set fishermen to thinking of a way to increase the supply, which is by far inadequate to fulfill the demand. As a result the establishment of lobster pounds has been considered a feasible plan, which has been proven successful by the United States fish commissioners at Rhode Island hatcheries this spring. Requests have been pouring into the office of the commission at Washington for permits to maintain lobster pounds, but it seems as if requests count for little, and that under present conditions it is an exceedingly risky undertaking to go into the lobster raising business, at any rate in this state. The small fry that would be necessary in the industry would come under the head of short lobsters, and if the law was enforced up to the letter, the proprietor of a lobster pound would have to be a millionaire in order to pay the fines.

The state fish and game commission has received suggestions to consider the changing of the law regarding the maintenance of lobster pounds, or to instruct fish wardens not to interfere with the business. The commission, however, is apparently not in sympathy with the scheme, and will give no guarantee that the proprietor of a lobster pound will be allowed to raise lobsters without paying the penalties of the law. In a nutshell, a person in Massachusetts who raises lobsters is liable to experience trouble.

There have been pounds established in this vicinity, but they do not come under the above-named class, for the reason that it is not the intention to keep in possession undersized lobsters, but small legal ones, to be reared until larger.
